MISCELLANEOUS READING. THIS TIME POSITIVELY! MY FAVORITE NAME.—BY ROWLAND BROWN.

There is a sweetly simple name, Which hath a mystic spell, Unknown to fortune or to fame, Yet memory guards it well.

Tis graven deep in letters bright, Upon that secret scroll Where none but Love's blest names are tra-The tablet of the soul!

I never feel it on my lips In hours of toil or pain, But thoughts of peace, like violets smile When blessed with April rain. And oh! enshrined with jealous care,

This talisman within Has kept me in temptation's hour From many a snare of sin.

Blest is the heart, to whom a name So favored has been given, As hers, which first, on bending knee, I breathed in prayer to Heaven. For oh! this is the star of thoughts,

Which sheds a light divine-

This name so very dear, will soon Be garlanded with mine.

TICKLED TO LIFE. In one of Lemaitre's pieces the "cue" required that he should enter bearing the dead body of a young brother in his arms. The supernumerary charged with this part played so well the dead man, the public interrupted Frederick Lemaitre's soliloquy with a hearty round of applause. Lemaitre was excessively angry, and, while speaking, blew in the nose of the "dead man," who did not budge. Lemaitre then, pre-HOWARD ASSOCIATION, PHILADEL tending to yield to a fit of despair, plucked a handful of hair from the poor supernumerary's head; he did not move. At last Lemaitre suddenly opened his arms, that he might dry the fast flowing tears in his eyes; the poor supernumerary fell on his head, which made the stage floor echo with the loud rap; he lay as he fell, without moving. Lemaitre could not proceed .-Round after round of applause was bestowed on the humble supernumerary. Lemaitre's anger knew no bounds, and he swore that the open a Dispensary for the treatment of this poor supernumerary should not be applauded the next evening. When he brought in his dead brother the second time he began ter with a description of their condition, (age tickling his ribs the momment he entered the stage; the supernumerary tried to look "dead," but a broad grin soon stole over

TENNYSON. In illustrating a point in his eloquent speech on the admission of Kansas, referring to the international copy-right, Senator Benjamin pays the following glowing tribute to the poet Tennyson—which we insert as one ally adorns his speeches: Let us take a case, one that appeals to us all. There lives now a man in England who from time to time sings to the enchanted ear of the civilized world, strains of such melody that the charmed senses seem to abandon the grosser regions of earth, and to rise to purer and serener regions above. God has created that man a poet. His inspiration is his; his songs are his right divine; they are his property, so recognized by human law; yet here in these United States men steal Tennyson's works, and sell his property for their pront; ed of A.
